

FAC 660. Academic Advising Program

The welfare of each student should be a primary concern of each faculty member. Faculty members should be available for advising with students. Faculty members should take the initiative in advising whenever they see the need for it, or they should report the need to the colleague who is in the position to do the most good. Any undesirable practices pertaining to the physical, intellectual, social, or moral life of a student should be reported to the Dean of Students. Problems found through advising should also be reported to the Dean of Students. An “early alert” system is in place, by which all personnel are encouraged to communicate any perceived student problems to the Deans’ Office.
